does not exist in the database I need to send a message back to the client to say that it does not exist and also when the method returns I need to send a message back to the client saying the user exists. I'm currently sending these messages back to the client as a HttpResponseMessageResult but I feel like I'm doing this the wrong way. Is this possible? I have the following code currently:

[HttpPost] public HttpResponseMessage Get(string userID) { if (UserID != userID) { return Request.CreateResponse(HttpStatusCode.NotFound); } else { return Request.CreateResponse(
