Q: How do I get a match for a value in a collection that is a function of another value in the collection in.NET C#? I'm trying to find a way to get a collection that has a given value in it, and then from that collection (that has the value), can get a collection of all the items where a certain property in that collection is equal to a given value. I.e. I am trying to get all items in the collection that match the value of a collection, where the collection I have to get is itself a collection of items. As an example I have a collection of companies, and I want to find a particular company. I have tried doing this with linq: var targetCompany = (from c in collectionOfCompanies where c.Name == "Target"); But this doesn't work because the collection doesn't have the values (company name) as objects, but rather the values (the company 0cc13bf012

The mural by Jeff Blake, an artist in Hollywood who works at a studio called Animation Collective, depicts Dora and another beloved children's character, Diego, seated at a table. The words "And there was light" are written in Spanish at the bottom of the painting. "This mural was created to raise awareness about how children are using the internet," Blake, who is also a teacher, said Friday. "I wanted to do something that I would want my children to
