Beneath that headline, EA Sports has delivered some truly impressive technology. The franchise's new Engine is built from the ground up to be able to "forget" objects that are merely within five metres of the player, meaning you will only ever see what the player really sees. This largely comes from the increasing usage of trickery. FIFA 21's "360 Bounds" mechanic has been scrapped for "360 Sprinting," which will drastically increase the pacing of the on-ball action, as well as creating more of a gameplay strategy that sees players making careful runs, dummifying a defender, or even faking to the goalkeeper. In the new engine, EA has used what its tech team calls "autolimiting," which means that a player's surroundings are viewed as the player's boundary, which can be approached by the player, once he has the ball. Stick to your formation In general, movements are far more flexible, with more players able to run with the ball, and the required run-up time on a sprint is drastically reduced. That being said, there are still restrictions to how many players can go forward at any one time. In FIFA 21, only two midfielders could go forward, unless they had the ball, and three central players could go forward, unless they had the ball. This is no longer the case in Fifa 22 Activation Code. Above: In FIFA 21, players could only run with the ball if a 'cone' of space opened up. Now players can go anywhere they want, as long as the cone behind them is clear. In FIFA 21, this cone would be very small, but in FIFA 22 it is no longer restricted to a small radius. It can be anywhere. The caveat is that it will be very clear when a player goes beyond the cone and doesn't clear, so a player sprinting past two defenders out of the back will still be sprinting towards the outside of the cone, so they will still be tackled. In theory, the aim is to let players make key decisions about which player they want to move towards.

You can now see where the ball is going, so if a player is sprinting, they are typically sprinting in the direction of the ball - but the engine is also smart enough to stop them if a space is closing up behind them.

Q: How to improve my skill in cleaning up? I got a lot of reputation for editing questions, and I like doing that. It would be cool if I could actually make the edits stick, and hence could earn the reputation. While cleaning up other people's posts (which I'm doing a lot) I've learnt something - I really want to be able to edit questions myself. I don't think it should be a big deal to edit questions on Stack Overflow, as the questions themselves are edited, and we also have the ability to put inline comments and tags. The editing ability would benefit all of us, new people and people just using Stack Overflow. I want to show my strength in cleaning up but I'm also bothered by the fact that I'm essentially going to a website where my contributions aren't valued, or at least put forward for comment. I don't think that's right. What can I do about this? A: I've found Clean Up Overflow to be a good source for my edits.
