E-Sports athlete turned video game producer Milo (pronounced "Milo") Casic will be teaming up with Electronic Arts (EA) in this new collaboration. Casic has been instrumental in the growth of competitive gaming, as the professional player has earned over $300,000 in his eSports career. He also had the opportunity to work on the popular game "Battlefield 4" with the "Hall of Famer" community. His first work as the Associate Producer for FIFA 22 will be to evaluate player behaviors and game flow, while helping to design and evolve the ball physics and gameplay for FIFA. "I'm very excited to be a part of the technical side of these new games. My knowledge of games is two-fold: on the one side I played the games, and as an e-sports player I was an athlete with higher expectations and a greater responsibility toward myself, my teammates and the sport," Casic said. "On the other side, as a producer I'm into the design, creativity and art side of it all. So by combining the two, I hope to bring a new insight to the game of FIFA as a whole. We've spent many months brainstorming and have now taken our first real steps to the new direction for FIFA," he added. "Casic has been with us since the beginning," said David Rutter, Executive Producer. "He's been an extraordinary contributor to FIFA, helping us evolve and improve the depth, authenticity and immediacy of the game. His experience as a game developer, his broad game expertise and his understanding of the e-Sports space mean he's a vital part of our team." "It's an honor to work with David and the rest of the FIFA team," said Milo Casic. "My role as Associate Producer will be to help translate the e-Sports community of fan base as well as the competitive community to one of the premiere sports games of all time. And, of course, to bring my over 20-years of experience as an athlete and game developer to a game that's been around for 25 years now. I'm excited to be a part of all this."
