Search current listings and sold items on eBay to check the average new and used price of items starting with letter: c.Q: Is it possible to access the beginning of local vars inside nested functions? Given the following sample code: def print_elem(num): print "Element #", num print

"Empty element: ", (var_is_empty if var_is_empty else "not empty") I would like to know whether I can get at the innermost var_is_empty variable from inside the nested print_elem() function. I've tried various forms of returning values from functions but can't access the variable in anything resembling the nested function format. A: You can't do it if var_is_empty is in scope of print_elem, if you want to access var_is_empty on the fly, you need to do something like: def f(x): def g(x): print x return g f(2)() # prints 2 def f(x): def g(x): return x+1 return g f(2)() # prints 3 In this case g is a closure, you can access x using g's argument x. But if your code is more complicated, don't do that, it's better to create a new binding to avoid all kinds of problems. Q: How to remove element from the array based on if it has all its children based on class? I have the array of DOM elements: const elementArray = document.querySelectorAll('.my-class'); Now, I want to remove all the elements with all its children. For example: [,
